
Ephesus Library

An Old Greek Library filled with books
Originates the idea of Panta Rhei, a philosophy
To explain and support daily life

Which at its core means that there
Is just one thing that never changes:
Everything changes constantly,
Although this doesn't give much
Comfort when you die

The parable told by Heraclitus of Ephesus
Is that one never crosses
The same river twice.
Not so hard to understand
But there are some other ways to look at it

Better to say, being part of the river,
One never crosses it at all.

It is not the flowing stream that matters
But the quality of its sweet water

Any drop has a conscious choice
To influence its precious Taste,
And when a water drop evaporates
Into the sky and clouds above,
One day it will rain
And reunite

There is a special place where the river
Flows forward and back again once a year,
It seems to reverse in Time

Or shall we say,
Being part of the river,
Time was an illusion anyway

But what about Cleopatra,
Paulus and Maria who visited
Ephesus in its glorious days?

It's a Greek Tragedy and Comedy in One
The river flows into the Sweet Timeless Ocean
